And our proven track record of sound investments ensures those generous gifts can continue creating meaningful change into the future.

- We are a collection of charitable funds established by individuals, families, businesses, and organizations to help address critical needs and improve the quality of life in Collier County.
- We receive charitable gifts, work with families, individuals, attorneys and estate and financial planners to devise plans that fit every economic situation, ensuring that donors’ charitable contributions are used to the fullest extent and for maximum benefit.
- We place those gifts into funds, manage the assets of those funds for growth and make grants from those funds.
- We offer several types of funds to help donors achieve their charitable goals while also meeting community needs.
- In addition to making donations to nonprofits and special projects in our community, we identify needs, accumulate resources to address those needs, and help Collier County prepare for the future.
- Our volunteer board and experienced staff are committed to understanding donor needs, representing their charitable interests, expertly handling complex gifts, wisely managing charitable funds and leveraging a wealth of community knowledge to increase charitable impact.
- We serve as a hub for collaboration between philanthropists, nonprofits and other funding organizations across the community.

TURTLE TIME

The Community Foundation of Collier County is a leader in community collaboration through grant distributions to nonprofit organizations and local programs which address community needs—from complex issues to simple solutions. In April 2018, the Community Foundation provided a small grant of $2,000 donation to the Collier County Parks and Recreation Division Sea Turtle Protection Program, to construct sea turtle cages to keep predators such as raccoons out of incubating sea turtle nests on Vanderbilt Beach. Previously, since 1995, the nests had been protected with flat screens secured into the sand with metal tent stakes. However, raccoons had since figured out how to dig below the screens and remove the eggs and hatchlings. By the end of June 2018, the new cages substantially reduced the number of stolen eggs from over 2,000 in the 2017 nesting season to only 15 this year. Simple solutions with remarkable results.

MESSAGE FROM THE BOARD CHAIR AND PRESIDENT

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Dear Friends,

“Alone we can do so little; together we can do so much.” Never before has this quote by Helen Keller resonated so deeply here in Collier County as in this past year. Since September 2017, we have witnessed the determination, passion, and kindness of those who came together to help neighbors and complete strangers in need after we were hit by the largest storm ever to make landfall in Florida—Hurricane Irma.

“Collier Comes Together” is not only the name of our Hurricane Irma disaster relief fund but also describes how, thanks to the help of our Board of Trustees, staff, community, philanthropic partners, nonprofits and the generosity of many others spanning the country, we were able to provide thousands with aid—from immediate needs such as food and water, to rental assistance and lost wages, and to long-term needs of roof replacement and home repair.

While helping to get our community back on its feet absorbed a significant portion of our time and resources, we were also able to focus on initiatives to generate awareness and change such as the Community Needs Assessment Study conducted with the Richard M. Schulze Family Foundation. This eye-opening study identified gaps in local health and mental health care access, education, and housing affordability and has already inspired action, not only by the Community Foundation but also by local officials and organizations as well.

We are proud to present to you the Community Foundation of Collier County 2017-18 Community Report. This publication represents more than just our facts and figures. It offers you an up close and personal look into the game changers over the past year, what inspired people to give, and what we were able to accomplish due to the generosity of those who care so deeply. It celebrates visionary thinking, innovative solutions, an entrepreneurial spirit and the desire to make a difference in the community we all love.

We are pleased to share our success stories and are so grateful to the many that made them possible. With your generous support, our opportunities are endless. We can continue to be proactive and forward thinking in how we can best serve our community. Not every gift is monumental, but each one inspires positive change.

Coming together is just the beginning. By working together, we will make a lasting difference.

With great appreciation,

Mary Lynn Myers,
CFCC Board Chair

Eileen Connolly-Keesler,
CFCC President/CEO

OUR MISSION:

To improve the quality of life in Collier County by connecting donors to community needs and providing leadership on critical community issues. For good. Forever.

THE COMMUNITY FOUNDATION OF COLLIER COUNTY is governed by a Board of Trustees and committees comprised of local community leaders and philanthropists. The Community Foundation is administered by a full-time professional staff. Operating expenses are paid from management fees, through grants and partnerships with local and national foundations and organizations, and from gifts designated by donors to cover Foundation operating costs.

For a complete listing of funds and grants, please visit cfcollier.org.
Robert S. “Rusty” Troth has taken a generational approach to lift up Collier County by identifying and meeting crucial needs. The Howard and Troth Family Fund was established 17 years ago with his wife, Betty Howard Troth, their three adult children, and their grandmother, Betty R. Howard—lighting the way for future philanthropists in the family.

As a six-year board member of Fun Time Early Childhood Academy, Troth has been a generous supporter through the Fund and through his hands-on leadership—preparing hundreds of low-income children aged 2 to 5 for academic success in kindergarten and beyond. The Fund has also been a generous donor to the Community Foundation of Collier County, providing it with much-needed funding to purchase its own building and with operating support—ensuring it will continue having a significant impact. And when disaster strikes, the Howard and Troth Family Fund has the flexibility to donate to national organizations, and local relief agencies and efforts, including the Collier Comes Together Fund following Hurricane Irma. “Decisions are made on a case-by-case basis,” Rusty Troth explained.

A family fund reflects the passions of each family member, and it is clear that Troth has a soft spot in his heart for giving young students at Fun Time a hand-up that will last their lifetime. His Family Fund is a significant benefactor for the Fun Time annual appeal, a yearly fundraiser and the Community Foundation of Collier County Give Where You Live Collier campaign. More than that, he immerses himself in leading research on brain development and preparing youngsters for academia before they reach kindergarten, and tracks changing grant-making trends and demographics in Collier County. He is what Fun Time Executive Director Barbara Tyrell calls “a working board member who’s a strong leader and who has a very balanced perspective about where we should put our energies.”

His children, Jeanne Troth Dowd and Christopher and Andrew Troth, are successor donor advisors. Their mother died in 2006, and every year, each sibling is allocated about 10 percent of the fund’s anticipated total distributions for the year. They provide their recommendations to their father, who adds them to his list of grantees for the Community Foundation, where the Fund is held.

Troth is buoyed by Fun Time’s success in preparing its 96 children for success and aware of its board’s challenge in raising more than 50 percent of the school’s budget each year. “Charitable giving has always been an important objective and responsibility within the Howard and Troth families. The establishment of the Howard and Troth Family Fund has proven to be a convenient and fruitful way to help the family meet those responsibilities,” he says. “Beyond that, the family has been pleased to partner with the Community Foundation of Collier County in accomplishing its mission of addressing important needs in this community and beyond.”

Giving is All in the Family

With passion and devotion, the Howard and Troth Family Fund lights the way for children and families in need with a state-of-the-art approach to education.
BUILDING AN ENDOWMENT

ENDOWMENTS + SCHOLARSHIPS = GRADUATION SUCCESS

Students tutoring students. What better way for the future leaders of tomorrow to feel empowered and connected while making a difference in the lives of so many.

When the Guadalupe Center in Immokalee launched a $2 million endowment campaign, it partnered with the Community Foundation of Collier County to set up and manage the fund. Donors Rosemary and Walter Blankley, who is a long-time Guadalupe Center board trustee, created the Blankley Tutor Corps Scholarship Endowment in 2017, offering to donate $1 million if the nonprofit could raise $1 million. The $2 million of principal remains untouched, but the interest it generates annually can fund $100,000 in scholarships for college students who have participated in the center’s Tutor Corps program. Guadalupe’s goal is to have a $10 million scholarship endowment that would fund the annual scholarships for 100 students each year.

Tutor Corps pays Immokalee High School students to tutor kindergartners through second-graders, giving the tutors a source of income and work experience. It is also an intensive college-preparatory program with a remarkable success rate: 100 percent of the participants graduate from high school, and more than 90 percent receive college degrees. There are currently 136 Tutor Corps scholarship recipients, who can earn up to $4,000 in assistance each year, in college.

“We didn't have a traditional endowment before this. We thought the Community Foundation was the best way to manage these funds and maximize our return,” said Guadalupe Center Executive Director Dawn Montecalvo. “We're excited to build the endowment for sustainability for students for years to come.” Her organization also moved several other funds—worth more than $3 million—over to the Community Foundation for their professional investment management expertise.

“Community Foundation staff are great partners in providing guidance and education for the community, as well as introducing organizations like ours and causes like ours to donors in the community,” said Montecalvo. She points to community-wide collaborations among nonprofits as an example of leadership, too. “We're all working together—approaching our challenges as a community, not as individual organizations. The Community Foundation has been very helpful with that.”
A Couple’s Love for Their Community Lives On

Alfred and Vera Goodman left the United Kingdom to make Naples their home decades ago. With few heirs, they wanted their estate to go to local nonprofits that serve needs they were passionate towards. Local estate attorney Brian McAvoy and a bank were tasked with executing the Goodmans’ trust and established a field of interest fund at the Community Foundation of Collier County so their legacy would have a lasting impact.

“We decided the best thing to do would be to go to the Community Foundation and establish a fund in their name so the gift would live on in perpetuity and benefit the community they loved,” recalls McAvoy. And that’s exactly what’s happened. Since it was founded in 2000, the Alfred and Vera Goodman Fund has distributed $809,366 in grants to local healthcare and human services agencies. This year, the Naples Therapeutic Riding Center and NAMI of Collier County were each granted $15,000.

Naples Therapeutic Riding Center was able to provide free therapeutic riding experiences to clients from three local nonprofits: The Shelter for Abused Women & Children, Avow, and Youth Haven. It was also able to trim its waiting list for this remarkable equestrian program that not only provides therapy but brings joy to so many. “We’re so grateful for donors like this who have specific goals, and we are very grateful to receive the support that enables us to help more people,” said Naples Therapeutic Riding Center Executive Director Melissa Saracino Lamont.

NAMI is using its grant to expand its free Health Under Guided Systems (HUGS). The only program of its kind helps families identify and treat developmental, social, emotional, behavioral and mental health challenges in their school-age children. “It can be anything that’s preventing a child from maximizing their potential in school and in life,” said Darla Pasteur, NAMI chief development officer. The caseload is expected to rise from 2,200 students to 3,000 or more this year. In 2017, the Goodman fund provided a $9,000 grant to cover half the cost of a passenger van to transport clients recovering from mental illness to the Sarah Ann Center, where 500 participants gather each month for social and cultural activities to avoid isolation.

“We’re grateful to donors like this who have specific goals,” said Melissa Saracino Lamont.

A couple’s dedication to helping children will live on through a legacy fund, bringing solace to the community they love.
WOMEN’S FOUNDATION OF COLLIER COUNTY SCHOLARSHIPS

Jasmine Lopez-Ramirez, 18, is flying off to Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University to study aerospace engineering with dreams of developing or piloting experimental aircraft for NASA or SpaceX. The National Honor Society student has been focused on her goals all along. She already earned her private pilot’s license during four years of aviation instruction at Lely High School with the encouragement of her teacher, who is also her flight instructor. “Financial aid to achieve my short- and long-term goals is something I’ve known I would need since the beginning of my high school career,” she said.

She’s also considering becoming a commercial pilot, a predominantly male career choice. “I’m excited as to what’s to come. Knowing that this field is mostly male only encourages me to try my very best and excel. I’m very thankful for the Women of Initiative Scholarship and the chance to follow my dreams,” said the Collier County native.

The Women’s Foundation of Collier County, a fund at the Community Foundation of Collier County, understands that education is key to breaking the cycle of poverty and awarded 12 scholarships totaling $60,000 for local women at the 2018 Women of Initiative Honorees Luncheon in March. The scholarship fund was founded by Women of Initiative alumnae in honor of the 20th anniversary of the awards.

Thanks to a Women’s Foundation scholarship, another motivated and deserving young woman, Viva Jean, is finally able to become a nurse—a career she’s held in her heart since watching her mother struggle with tuberculosis in Haiti.

Jean’s mother had inadequate medical care in the impoverished island nation and succumbed to the intractable disease when Jean was 10 years old. Now 28, Jean relocated to Southwest Florida after her mother’s death and graduated from Immokalee High School. She earned a bachelor’s in business with a concentration in healthcare administration—the first in her family to attend college.

A Moorings Park employee for eight years, Jean is attending Florida Southwestern College to become a registered nurse, thanks to a $5,000 Women of Initiative Scholarship. “I enjoy helping people, and the best way to help people is saving someone’s life. What better way to do that than in the medical field?” said the single mother of a young daughter. “I’m super grateful and honored. This award means I don’t have to worry about adding on to student loans I already have. When I found out about the scholarship, I cried.”

Jasmine Lopez-Ramirez is in control of her future with the help of a Women’s Foundation scholarship.

Solutions for Unconventional Learning

Hannah didn’t miss out on her classwork or Calusa Park Elementary School friends while she was hospital-bound in Philadelphia for a week. A VGo “telepresence” robot provided to the school district by a donor-advised fund at the Community Foundation of Collier County connected her in real time through a laptop and joystick from afar.

Hannah, a kindergartner who requires treatments at the Shriners Hospitals for Children, participated in morning meetings and guided reading assignments. “Hannah was able to participate in her academic responsibilities, contribute and be a valued member of her class,” said her mother. “What Hannah enjoyed the most was being able to stay connected to her friends and her fabulous teacher.”

The VGo was also used in a pilot program at Sabal Palm Elementary in an intensive behavior intervention classroom for students in the first and second grade. The teacher taught a dreaded phonics lesson by sitting at a laptop in a separate room, while the students trained their attention on the robot. No one was disruptive, and the students actually enjoyed it. “They were so engaged and participated in the lesson much more than they normally would have,” says Collier County Public Schools Assistive Technology Specialist Sheri Wiseman. “We all know that when you can increase engagement, poor behaviors decrease.”

The audio-enabled robot with webcam was donated last year through the donor-advised fund of Alex and Pat Vance. Another VGo is being ordered courtesy of a grant by Naples estate attorney Bill Myers through the Community Foundation. Enabling remote classroom attendance was one of the robot’s original intentions. This academic year, Wiseman’s team was in an “exploratory mode” to assess alternative applications.

“I think it’s great they’re finding creative ways to use it. It’s a case where technology has benefits in ways that may not be originally intended but are instructive nonetheless,” said Alex Vance. “We all have to learn to use technology in our daily lives, and we all want to find ways to make it meet our needs.”

This VGo robot puts a positive spin on being plugged-in by bringing the classroom to students anywhere; supporting engagement and collaboration while having a fun time learning.
Everyone watched with trepidation as Hurricane Irma grew into a 400-mile-wide behemoth and tracked her trajectory toward Southwest Florida last September, bracing for the worst. After the most massive hurricane to hit Florida made landfall on Marco Island, we all came together to embrace the road to recovery.

Unity was the common goal for Collier County residents, nonprofits, and agencies. The Community Foundation of Collier County, in partnership with the United Way of Collier County, quickly established the Collier Comes Together Disaster Relief Fund to pool tax-deductible contributions to meet the deluge of immediate needs—both immediate and long-term.

Before the storm, the Community Foundation had already forecast the possibility of a community crisis. Community Foundation President and CEO Eileen Connolly-Keesler had brought several partners together over two days in August to discuss how the Foundation should prepare philanthropically for addressing a natural or man-made disaster. “Two weeks later, we have Irma. It was intuitive, serendipity, whatever you want to call it,” she said. The Community Foundation’s generous board members and donors, partners such as the Richard M. Schulze Family Foundation, and organizations such as the Collier Building Industry Association, unified to build a nearly $2.2 million relief fund. One hundred percent of donations were distributed to 27 nonprofits aiding 4,146 hurricane victims, with no administrative fee.

“Together, both our organizations hosted a FEMA roundtable discussion where we invited nonprofit agencies and 12 FEMA representatives from all departments after Irma’s landfall,” said United Way of Collier County President and CEO Steve Sanderson. The United Way received a $50,000 Collier Comes Together grant for its 211 hotline and Volunteer Col-
A $35,000 grant to Collier County Public Schools assisted students to get back in their homes,” Principal Jim Ragusa reported in May. Everglades City School were displaced “and a lot of them are still waiting.”

The Salvation Army gave out 650 gift cards from the Collier Comes Together Fund to 185 households totaling $125,500 in hard-hit communities, including East Naples and Golden Gate. "It could have been the difference between whether someone could eat or not eat,” said Salvation Army Naples Regional Coordinator Director of Social Services and Disaster Recovery, Ashley Jones. "The gift cards allowed the Salvation Army to immediately respond to the needs of survivors and allow them the flexibility to purchase the items they needed. The Community Foundation was forward-thinking, and asked: ‘What's next? What can we do to fill the immediate void?’"

Irma’s wrath brought floodwaters to Everglades City and outlying towns such as Jerome, Copeland and Ochoppee, Chokoloskee, Planta- tion Island, and Immokalee, hitting these low-income Collier County communities the hardest. At one point, a third of the 190 students at Everglades City School were displaced “and a lot of them are still waiting to get back in their homes.” Principal Jim Ragusa reported in May 2018. A $35,000 grant to Collier County Public Schools assisted students throughout the county who were left homeless for nearly three months after the storm.

Before Irma, 68 percent of the Everglades student body was on free or reduced lunches, that number rose to 88 percent after the storm. The Communities of Everglades Disaster Recovery Task Force continues to meet twice a month to pour over needs and solutions. It’s been estimated that as many as three-quarters of the area’s buildings — many uninsured — were flooded up to four feet. “It was a traumatic blow to this community,” Ragusa said.

No matter where you live, preparing for the storm—even evacuating or putting up storm shutters and stocking up on supplies—cost residents unbudgeted, out-of-pocket expenses. The aftermath brought costs, too. Loss of power meant loss of refrigerators worth of food, and the need to purchase ice, water, generator fuel, medicine, tarps, cleaning supplies and other vital staples. Some uninsured residents incurred unforeseen medical costs due to lacerations, back injuries, broken bones and infections sustained while clearing fallen trees and moldered drywall. Lost paychecks before and after the storm.

One recipient, Rural Neighborhoods, Inc., was granted $295,000 to assist residents, seniors, the disabled, and low-income households in Immokalee, Naples, and River Park affected by Hurricane Irma. Rural Neighborhoods is a housing and community development charity that has been working in Immokalee since 2002. President Steve Kirk said a typical roof replacement is $10,000 but can run up to $17,000. Some homes only needed a repair. Others were flooded, requiring floors, drywall, counters, and cabinets to be replaced. Homes were not insured, or insurance did not cover total repair costs.

Kirk’s organization worked side-by-side with volunteers to defray labor costs wherever possible. Habitat teams also acted as project liaisons, helping homeowners find general contractors and subcontractors, negotiating, scheduling and closing out project contracts. By this summer, some homeowners were still waiting to hear back from their insurance companies before moving forward. And in Everglades City, where the cost to elevate a home runs up to $90,000, structural and soil boring assessments were still underway. According to some estimates, recovery will take up to five years.

Kirk remains amazed at the flexibility the Collier Comes Together Fund provided in tackling a diverse array of needs, as well as donors’ generosity. “The swiftness and flexibility of the Fund were important to us in trying to respond quickly to a mixed set of repairs,” he said. “Before we started, the Community Foundation asked us what we felt our community needs were. The Foundation was open to all ideas.”
A COMMUNITY’S CHANGING NEEDS

Focusing on the demand for increased mental health therapy, housing affordability, and increased access to technical education

The Community Foundation of Collier County partnered with the Richard M. Schulze Family Foundation on the 2017 Collier County Community Needs and Assets Assessment to identify and quantify the community’s assets and most pressing issues. The Community Needs and Assets Assessment was a comprehensive effort that brought together almost 4,000 experts, residents, stakeholders and nonprofit leaders—combined with the analysis of existing data and studies—to prioritize strategic grant-making and spur innovative tactics for addressing those needs. Mental health, housing affordability and more access to technical education rank high on the list of priorities.

“The Community Foundation is very innovative concerning their outreach to the community, and that makes us excited and happy to partner with them,” said Schulze Foundation Florida Director Mary Beth Geier.

A COMMUNITY’S CHANGING NEEDS

Focusing on the demand for increased mental health therapy, housing affordability, and increased access to technical education

The Community Foundation’s Changing Needs Fund—established in 1985 as a visionary way to address emerging gaps or issues—made grants that aim at these three significant issues impacting the community today and well into the future.

One Changing Needs grant is funding research for a potential new “tech education center of the future” that provides highly specialized workforce training. The study is being conducted by Hodges University and the Greater Naples Chamber of Commerce. “It’s a means of approaching the next economy—to get out in front of the new economy, develop a strong workforce, and attract those businesses to our area,” said Chamber President/CEO Michael Dalby. The results of the study are expected to be presented to the Community Foundation by the end of this year.

Another grant was enlisting the nonprofit Ability Housing, Inc., to analyze and propose potential locations for the development of affordable and essential service personnel housing on sites owned by Collier County.

Third primary emphasis is on mental health services. Collier County woefully lacks in its ability to provide treatment. The ratio of mental health providers to the population is 977:1 compared to the state’s proportion of 689:1. This translates into a 30 percent shortage across the board, though services are even more limited for the uninsured and Medicare and Medicaid recipients.

David Lawrence Center was granted $20,000 to expand professional training to provide enhanced therapy to children admitted to its crisis unit. Juvenile committals rose 170 percent in the past five years in Collier County—the highest in the state—and transfers through law enforcement have skyrocketed. Nonetheless, 40 percent of Baker Act patients were transferred out of the county due to lack of bed space. “We have a major need for treatment beds and staff that go along with that,” said David Lawrence Center CEO Scott Burgess. “We are at peak capacity virtually every day.”

Geier is pleased that participants surveyed for the assessment are unified on priorities. “We’re all on the same page on what the needs are in the community, which gives us a solid place to start and a strong foundation to build on,” she said. “Our big picture is to improve the community by working with each other hand-in-hand on some of these initiatives moving toward a brighter future.”
